2010 Legislative Session Recap

Local, state and federal governments have been searching for every conceivable way to raise money for cash-strapped budgets, and that spells trouble for everyone, including businesses that have already cut to the bone. Employers have reduced, streamlined and cut as much as they can - doing their best to keep people employed and the doors open. But taxes are going up across the board — on utilities, workers' comp, unemployment insurance — and that puts more stress on employers and employees alike. Now, shortly after state lawmakers congratulated themselves on passing a backlog of bills on the last day of the regular legislative session Thursday and escaping the budget, Governor Gregoire has put them back to work by demanding a special session starting Monday, 3/15/10, to close a $2.8 billion budget shortfall.

How will the new state budget affect you this year? What new taxes will be imposed on employers?

Find out on March 26 as Gary Chandler, of the Association of Washington Business will provide a critical briefing on 2010 legislative session, and how these decisions will impact your business. Former State Rep. Gary Chandler is AWB's vice president of government affairs. He is the association's chief lobbyist and directs its legislative and regulatory programs.
